ALL THAT IS GOING ON

Clet of Week's News Stripped of Unnecessary Verbiage and Prepared for Quick Consumption by Busy People.

Miss Mary McDowell, a co-worker of Miss Jane Addams; Mrs. Joseph T. Bowen and Miss Breckenridge, social workers, will be candidates for the Chicago city council in the aldermanic race next spring. It was reported in suffrage circles.

William Travers Jerome, Harry K. Thaw's nemesis, said in Boston, in discussing Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, that she "never had a chance," and that, as she must make a living some way, she is justified, in his opinion, in going on the stage.

Fifty former members of the crew of the famous old battleship Oregon have petitioned to the secretary of the navy for permission to enlist for 60 to 90 days, to serve on the ship when it is sent through the Panama canal in 1915.

The British naval authorities at Portsmouth have just carried out important experiments in firing explosives at a distance by means of concentrated electrical rays.

Fifty-four bodies had been recovered from the chambers of Stag Canyon mine No. 2, at Dawson, N. M. Government experts, now in charge of the work of rescue, concede that 59 bodies are still within the gas-filled chambers.

John Niemela, who died of blood-poisoning at Chicago, confessed, the police say, that Mrs. Josephine Karmenjak stabbed him with a hatpin when he tried to hold her up several nights ago, and that the wound caused his death.

Phelps, Dodge & Co., New York bankers, have acquired control of the Rock Island railway system of 8,000 miles, the New York Evening Post says. The lines were formerly controlled, since 1902, by the Moore-Weld group.

The will of the late Adolphus Dusch was probated in St. Louis. It is authoritatively said that the inventory will aggregate $50,000,000, and will be the largest estate ever filed in Missouri.

The election in Mexico City leaves Dictator Huerta still ruler of the country—at least until the meager ballots of the people can be counted, which process may require several weeks. It is not believed that a sufficient number voted—10,000 out of 50,000—to make the election legal.

An insistent denial that she ever gave her husband poison brought to a dramatic close the direct examination of Mrs. Jennie May Eaton, widow of Rear Admiral Joseph G. Eaton, with whose murder she is charged, at Plymouth, Mass.

Hans Schmidt, the New York "priest" who killed Anna Ammeller and dismembered her body, was sane at the time of the murder and is sane now, according to a report submitted to District Attorney Whitman by four alienists the prosecutor retained to examine the slayer.

The New York state court of appeals postponed argument in the case of Police Lieutenant Charles Becker and the four gunmen concerned in the Rosenthal murder to Dec. 1, next.

Mrs. Charles Warren Fairbanks, wife of the former vice-president of the United States, died at her home in Indianapolis. She was stricken suddenly with pneumonia Oct. 15, and hope of her recovery had been abandoned almost from the outset.

General elections were held throughout Italy, resulting in a victory for the government. Disturbances at the polls were frequent. One man was killed and many wounded.

Miss Katherine Elkins has married "Billy" Hitt, her first sweetheart, after all. The ceremony was pronounced at Elkins, W. Va., and was witnessed only by a few near relatives and intimate friends.

J. Ogden Armour, Chicago meat packer, intimates that Armour & Co. would buy Argentina beef cattle if they want to. In spite of anything the government may do.

President Wilson issued his Thanksgiving day proclamation, setting Thursday, Nov. 27, as the day on which the people of the country shall offer thanks for the blessings of the year.

Seven Mexican miners, entombed six days in the Vogel and Lawrence lignite workings at Rockdale, Tex., were found alive when rescuers gained the mine interior by drilling a 50-foot shaft. The men were imprisoned by a cave-in following a cloudburst which flooded the mine.

CHEERING UP OF PATSY

By L. McRIFIELD.

"You don't know how I feel, mother, dear, about going up home and leaving Patsy here."

"Er—do you know any friend of Cora's at Edgemere named Patsy, Rex?" asked Mrs. Clews, looking up from her letter.

"Must be Patricia Boyd, mother. Cora's pet name for her, probably. Why?" Rex moved lazily from the sun parlor into the breakfast room. "She's a nice girl and good family, you know. Ask her up, why don't you?"

"Listen, though, Rex." She read on aloud:

"Patsy has been through some terrible grief the past summer that the rest of us can only guess at. She will never be the same again, mother, never. You know how some girls take things to heart, and Patsy is wounded to the quick. I will tell you more later, but you can guess what it was. MAN! I think, taken as a class, they are absolutely irresponsible and without good faith or real sentiment. I don't see how you ever found father, for he is, of course, an exception."

"Don't laugh, Rex," reproved Mrs. Clews, smiling herself. "Cora is in earnest, really. We had better ask Patsy here and try to cheer her up. How many of the Dartmouth boys did you ask?"

"Four. The other two fellows I wanted went up home to Vermont. I'm glad the Abbotts' coming."

A week later Cora arrived with Patricia Boyd. Patsy, as everyone called her, was small and slender with a mass of red gold hair, eyes brown and soft as a moth's wing, and a drooping mouth that pleaded for sympathy. In her dark green traveling suit with brown fur she was a charming picture, and Rex forgot her secret trouble when he lifted her out of the tonneau bodily.

Later he stopped his sister on the way downstairs, led her mysteriously into the small writing room next the library, and closed the door.

"What's the matter with Patsy?" he asked.

"Rex, I think you're positively brutal," Cora said, hotly. "I shall tell father if you don't open that door."

"Cora, I'm overboard, swimming for life, and you hold a life preserver in your grasp to rescue your own dear brother. I'm in love with Patsy."

"You'll never even get her to listen to you, Rex. She's frantically in love with someone she met last summer at one of the coast resorts. But he was one of the coast resorts."

Rex returned her look blankly.

"What resort?"

"I don't quite remember—Watch Hill, or Narragansett, or Block Island, one of them, anyway. She has a snap shot of him, and oh, Rex, he is splendid. You never saw such eyes."

"And she wouldn't marry him because he was a head waiter?"

Cora nodded. "Certainly not. The boys are very important people in Baterson, Mass."

The day the Dartmouth boys arrived Patsy kept to her room and nursed a headache. Cora, dressed in her daintiest, helped her mother make them welcome, and held Jack Pryor close to her side all the evening.

The following morning Patsy trailed down the stairs a bit languidly. Jack stood with his back to the archway, talking to Cora, very ardently and happily, when suddenly he stood up very straight and his face unconsciously hardened. As they were introduced, Patsy raised her long lashes and looked at him with a frightened cry of recognition.

"Oh, do you know Jack already?" asked Cora, quickly.

"He is like some one I used to know," Patsy answered, bravely, and went on.

But the next two weeks were filled with cross purposes and misadventures. Rex kept doggedly on his own way, disregarding the past summer and all of Patsy's notions, and back kept close to Cora's side. One clear cold night they came in from a run over the frozen roads and stood around the great open fire in the reception hall. Rex knelt to take off Patsy's little fur-edged carriage boots and Jack watched the two with a half smile of amusement. When they had left the room with the others he sat alone with Cora before the fire.

From the music room came the sound of Patsy's favorite "Traumerel," and Rex's laugh above it.

"I think Patsy will be my sister," said Cora, thoughtfully. "Rex is fearfully sweet on her."

"She's a dear kiddie," Jack answered, "but I don't care much for the type. She's too, as my old country granddad used to put it, light-minded for me."

"Why, Jack, what on earth do you mean? She's had a great sorrow, you know, only last summer."

"Yes, I think I know all about it," said Pryor, slowly. "I happen to be the bad water. Oh, don't look so startled, Cora. A lot of us Dartmouth boys went for a lark, and we studied social conditions that way, seeing the other side of life from the other fellow's point of view. It was a mighty good lesson in more ways than one. She thought she loved me, but she couldn't stand the social condition. Poor little Patsy!"

"You may keep your pity, Jack Pryor," came Patsy's clear treble behind them, and Rex beamed down on them placidly. "I am quite recovered from my summer fancy, and—you tell him, Rex."

"I'm the cure," grinned Rex.
